CAUGHT A KID ON HIS HOOK.
Justice Kelly, of Brooklyn.

Painful Accident Which Befel Adam Balzer's Hook Penetrated His Lip and Had to Be Cut Out.

Very few anglers succeed in landing a real live Judge, as did Adam Balzer, one of the political leaders of Kings County. Balzer was out bluebaiting yesterday with Associate Justice of the Sessions Kelly, August Joppert, the boniface of the Coney Island Boulevard, and several others, and, while throwing out his line caught the Judge by the under lip on his hook and held him tight. The hook had to be cut from the wound, and today Judge Kelly is under the care of a physician, fighting off a possible case of blood-poisoning.

The party was off Sandy Hook light-ship in a sailboat when the accident happened. A school of bluefish had just been struck, and as the luck had been indifferent during the day, everybody was alive to the opportunity of a big mess.

Balzer, who was one of the most enthusiastic of the lot, landed a six-pounder, and Judge Kelly joined him in the tussle in getting the hook from the fish's mouth. During the fuss, the line got entangled on the seat of the boat, but Balzer, not noticing this, got his line ready again and swung it out with great force. About three feet, the line was free, and went that far, then whizzed back in a circle, striking Judge Kelly full in the face. The Judge was partly stunned, and did not realize his plight until Balzer, with a laugh, pulled the line back. Judge Kelly went with a shooting in the eye.

Then there was consternation. Everybody gathered about him and it was found that the hook had glanced downward and gone through the Judge's under lip on the right side, about a sixteenth of an inch from the top. The hook was about three inches long, with a heavy barb, it went clean through the lip, barb and all, and when all hands took a turn in trying to work it from the wound, it was found that it was free, it was discovered that the barb caught each time and tore the lip more. After half an hour of trying to get it out, which Judge Kelly felt back in a semi-faint from pain and shock. When he had been released, the hook was found to have been bent, and it was suggested that the lip be split and the hook taken out. This rude surgical operation was performed by George F. Hohlner with his pocket-knife. When the hook was finally drawn out the Judge had an awful cutting.

The wound was washed with whiskey and bound with a piece of clean cloth. The Judge was still suffering from shock this morning.

CRUISE OF THE "GET THERES."
Brooklyn's Popular Organization Sails on the Plymouth To-Morrow.

Rev. P. Collier Remarries.

His Wife Was the Widow of Druggist Charles Robbins.

The announcement made to-day that Rev. P. Collier, formerly pastor of the Unitarian Church of Our Saviour, on Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, had remarried, was somewhat of a surprise to the clergyman's friends in Brooklyn.

None of these who were seen to-day by an "Evening World" reporter would say that they had previous knowledge of the marriage, but they admitted that such a union was not wholly unexpected.

This is Mr. Collier's second matrimonial venture. The trouble between the clergyman and his first wife was common talk among the members of his flock, and ultimately led to his resignation of the pastorate.

Collier's first wife was the widow of Charles Robbins, a druggist and partner in the drug firm of McKesson & Robbins, who died about five years ago, leaving her a large fortune. Some time ago she sold her home in Monroe place, and went to live at Newburg. She has two children.

Mr. Collier is a son of the late Robert Lauder Collier, who was a member of the Harvard College and the Cambridge Divinity School. He came to the Church of Our Saviour, a Unitarian minister, and was chaplain of the Twenty-third Regiment.

After entering upon his duties in Brooklyn, he was at one time a resident of Brooklyn, Mass. He was a member of the Unitarian Church of Our Saviour, and was a member of the Unitarian Church of Our Saviour.

When he finally decided to apply for a divorce he made out his resignation, and it was accepted. He was succeeded by Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, son of President Eliot of Harvard. Mr. Collier then went out West, and nothing more was heard of him, until he began an action in the Central District Court to secure a divorce, on the ground of incompatibility.

Mr. Collier's former acquaintances in Brooklyn were unable to say to-day where he could be found. They thought that the clergyman may have been married in Chicago.
